Civil Design Engineer – London | £40,000-£50,000 Complex sustainability-focused projects, no glass ceiling, and a 100% success rate for becoming Chartered. You'll join a civil engineering team that specialises in complex engineering often trying to reuse and extend existing buildings with sustainability in mind. Along with a lot of new build work, you'll often partner with contractors to re-engineer and re-imagine their work to find better solutions and win big projects - the Google building in Kings Cross, for example. Why are they hiring? Growth and demand. More and more clients are asking for civil engineering services, so this department is growing. Which will be great for you; growth = progression. They are based a short walk from Kings Cross St. Pancras station so should be an easy single train into the city for you. There are around 30 people in the London team, and they work from the office 3 days a week. Overtime is avoided unless absolutely necessary as they see it as counterproductive. There's a training scheme in place to pick up your progress to Chartered status, they do mock interviews, and their work is highly relatable to much of the criteria - demonstrated by their 100% pass rate for Engineers becoming Chartered. You won't be limited by a glass ceiling; they want to keep growing the business and the way to do that is to progress Senior Engineers up to Director level. And they want to grow Directors from within, rather than hiring externally. Sound like a Civil Engineer role you could be interested in?
