Company: SeatGeek

Location: United Kingdom

Category: computer-and-mathematical

SeatGeek believes live events are powerful experiences that unite humans. With our technological savvy and fan-first attitude we're simplifying and modernizing the ticketing industry.

We believe rights-holders, not ticketing companies, should have full control over the tools they use and partners they choose within their ticket-selling ecosystem. Third-parties make that ecosystem better – from tools that provide analytics, data visualization, dynamic pricing, and more – and our flexible, open, modern SRO (Standing Room Only) platform makes those integrations possible.

We're proud to partner with some of the most recognized names across the globe including the Dallas Cowboys and Liverpool F.C., as well as the NFL, MLS, half of the English Premier League, and theaters across NYC's Broadway and London's West End.

We're looking for bright, curious software engineers who want to help millions of people experience the thrill of live entertainment through our SRO product. The ticketing industry is messy, complex and makes attending live events more difficult than it is; we believe a thoughtful application of software can fix that. We are looking for a Senior Software Engineer with varying levels of experience to join SeatGeek's R&D team.

Who you are

5+ of experience building fullstack web applications, ideally within a microservices architecture. We'll be most interested in hearing about what you've built
